The Sinclair Poem

©2010 By Gordon Vaughan Sinclair Holmes

A homeland won with axe and sword
And bow and shield and dirk
Next, shoulders bent on stone and beam
They also did their work

With ramparts high, where banners fly
Chisels carved our Coat of Arms
Above each drawbridge, thick and broad
Our motto blazed this simple truth, it read:
"Commit Thy Work To God"

And in peaceful and artistic way
Roslin was built and Roslin stays
For every Sinclair generation
To reach out to God and pray

So wear the proud Tartan, play on the pipes
Hold your hearts open to the whole of your kin
And remember our Motto for all your life
Each morning, each evening, before turning in

No matter how grand the daily parade
No matter how loud you applaud
Trust your Quiet. Trust your soul, and
"Commit Thy Work To God"

The Sinclair Poem received its Inaugural Reading by Malcolm Caithness at the 3rd International Gathering of Clan Sinclair in Wick, Caithness, Scotland, July 2010.
